

Consumers want the choice of retaining their phone number when they switch wireless providers. Changing phone numbers is a big hassle for consumers, and preventing us from using the same number when we switch providers hinders our ability to make wise, market driven choices, and hinders competition among cellular providers. Let the choice reside with the consumer, not the industry. Isn't that the job of the FCC? To manage a public resource in the public interest?